CARPENTIER WINS BOUT WITH SMITH ON FOUL CLAIMED

Referee Allows Artful Trick of Seconds After American Has Knocked Out French Champion.

Referee Corri evidently is not friendly to American boxers for at the first round of the fight between Freddie Welsh, the light-weight title, Corri gave Carpentier, French champion, a victory of Gunboat Smith, American white heavy-weight, in the sixth round. The decision given by Corri proved very unsatisfactory to the immense crowd of 20,000. The foul came as a climax to the battle after five rounds of even fighting. Carpentier used an American crouch and at all times waited for the American to lead. The first three rounds the American jabbed home leads while Carpentier stood still and waited.

In the fourth the American continued to wait, but when he saw a chance in the middle of the ring Carpentier landed a right to the jaw, which dropped Smith for the count of nine. The American was groggy when he awoke, but the going was even. The fifth was even, for Gunboat had recovered by the knock-down and the French fighter was unable to follow up any of his leads. In the sixth Carpentier rushed him. Gunboat opened up a broadside with a right lead that landed flush on the French champion's jaw. The blow crumpled him and he fell to the floor on his knees. Smith over-anxious to land the knockout blow, thinking Carpentier was on his feet, started the finishing blow. On seeing his opponent helpless, the American attempted to stop the blow, but being over-balanced, was unable to stem its force and it hit the helpless Frenchman a grazing blow on the head. The manager of Carpentier protested and Referee Corri disqualified Smith, while the French Champion was a whipped fighter.

The stakes for last night's match were paid over today. Carpentier receiving a check for $15,000 while Buckley received $10,000, Smith not being present.

Buckley took the check without demur. He made no formal protest, the manager, the referee wanted to discuss the fairness of Eugene Corri's ruling. He displayed deep annoyance and refused to shake hands with Carpentier.

Sport Snap Shots

Packey McFarland, after his last retirement, is now ready to return to the ring. He is expected to return to the ring to retire to convince one and all that he was honestly and truly through for good. However, at the time he didn't know that Freddie Welsh was going to win the title from Ritchie. This seems to put the matter in a new light for Packey. He has now challenged Welsh and hopes to get a chance at a title before he quits the ring game forever and aye. If there ever was a fighter who deserves it, it's McFarland, and his popularity and reputation have been greater than those of many a fighter who has held a belt. Welsh since grabbing Ritchie's crown has been the recipient of many a challenge. It appears that there are quite a few fighters eager to take a swing at Welsh who were not so eager about it with Ritchie. Besides McFarland, both Charley White and Johnny Kilbane, the feather champ, are trying to sign up with Welsh.

The rate at which athletic records are being broken right along in every department makes one query at times when the limit of athletic prowess will be reached. It is clear that the college boys and others clear go on breaking records forever. And yet every season new marks are set only to be exceeded later on. Seldom does a year go by without seeing a new record made in swimming, diving or track and field events. It was thought at one time that Sweeney's high jump record would never be equaled. Since then many have shown that it is not only easy to equal but to beat. Ebbetts, the Brooklyn baseball magnate, said recently that baseball was still in its infancy. If this is true of baseball it may also be true of other lines of sport. And it is interesting to think what they may be doing fifty or a hundred years from now.

In all this talk of all-star teams, why not one of nationalities? For example:

Coveleski (Polish), pitcher.
McLean (Scottish), catcher.
Fournier (French), first base.
Morgan (English), second base.
Wagner (German), shortstop.
Zimmerman (Dutch), third base.
Thorpe (Indian), center field.
Walsh (Irish), right field.

This squad would put up a regular scrap with any other that could be gathered together. Certainly no person could complain of the batting possibilities.

Willie Mitchell of the Naps is known as the greatest seven-inning pitcher the game has ever known. He can be depended upon for the best sort of pitching for seven innings—and then he blows.

It would seem that the Athletics have the Washington Senators' goat securely tethered. Nothing else explains Clark Griffith's statement that Connie Mack and the whole bunch are a cheap outfit.

TO CONSTRUCT WALL AT BATHING BEACH

Chief Champion Order Playground Director to Build Dressing Place For Boys at Goose Island.

On the order of Chief of Police P. D. Champion, the directors of the public playgrounds will construct a dressing place for boys at the bathing beach on Goose Island for the bathers to dress for swimming. Complaints were received by the department from launch owners that people were subject to seeing too much of a "September Morn" costume on the bathers at the most popular swimming hole in the city.

Officers made several trips to the island where they found men as well as boys swimming without even the conventional bathing attire. This violation was adjusted following an order by Chief Champion to arrest those who failed to wear clothes.

Play ground officials agreed to construct a wooden wall sixteen feet long with eight foot wings as soon as possible to afford the bathers a chance to dress. Besides playgrounds boys the Goose island swimming beach is used daily by hundreds of other boys and men and during the evening many employees use the beach to escape the sultry weather and enjoy an hour's swim. The lower and spring swimming holes and daily there is a large congregation enjoying sports in the water here.

The river is noted for its treacherous currents and bathers are warned not to go beyond their depth. So far the city has escaped any deaths from drowning and it is hoped there will be no accidents this year as in the past summers. At Goose island ropes have been stretched across the water where there is a step off and boys who have not mastered the art of swimming are not allowed to go beyond the danger line.

MANY ENTRIES ARE RECORDED AT ELGIN

Road Races Are Growing in Popularity Rather Than Being on the Decline.

That road racing, instead of being on the decline, is gaining in popularity is evidenced by the manner in which entries are being recorded for Elgin road races to be run Aug. 21-22 under the joint auspices of the Chicago Automobile Club and the Elgin Automobile Road Racing Association. Indications are that a record field will start in the big middle western classic, for with the event still over five weeks off, eighteen entries have been received by Chairman C. G. Sinabach of the entry committee, who states that the surface has merely been scratched. In doing out a list of probable entrants it was found that thirty-nine cars are likely to start in the two big races—the Chicago Automobile Club trophy race on the opening day and the free for all, or Elgin National trophy contest on the second day. The entry list does not close until Aug. 15.

Included among those who already have sent in their signed entry blanks are Bob Burman, with the No. 6 Peugeot driven by Goux in the last 500 mile race at Indianapolis; Eddie Rickbacher, winner of the Sioux City 300 mile race with a Duesenberg; Harry Grant and George Babcock with the two English Sunbeams; Cyrus Patschke and Lou Heinenman with two Marmons nominated by Charles Erbstein, the Chicago lawyer; Barney Oldfield and G. H. Anderson with two Stutzes and E. J. Schroeder, who did not name his driver, with a Peugeot. All of the cars were entered in both races.

More foreign cars will start this year than ever before in the history of the Elgin events. In addition to those named above, Ralph DePalma is certain to drive a European car—probably a Mercedes, Ralph Mulford will be in with a Peugeot, while other stars will be seen behind the wheels of foreign machines which have become famous. The eight mile Elgin circuit is being improved at various points and will be faster than ever. A recent meeting of the promoting organizations the amount of prize money was raised to $6,000, with additional awards for drivers making the fastest lap in each race.

HURRY-UP DROP FOR PITCHER ALEXANDER

Grover Cleveland Alexander.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, a bear with the Phillies only two seasons back, has taken a hurry-up drop. In view of his poor work last season and this year his release by the Phillies had been anticipated, but it was thought he would go to a class AA organization. Instead he has been consigned to Syracuse in the New York State league.

ORDERS SHOOTING GALLERY TO BE CLOSED SATURDAY

Following numerous complaints Chief of Police Champion ordered B.

W. Williams to close his shooting gallery, which had been opened July fourth in the driveway of the Buckingham and Hixon Lumber company, on West Milwaukee street. The gallery is out in the open and Chief Champion declared that it was in violation of the city ordinance which allows for all shooting galleries to be in closed buildings. Williams promised to close tomorrow. If the orders are not complied with by them. The young lady as a warrant will be issued for shooting within the city limits.

AMUSEMENTS

THE APOLLO.
The Elit trio which is playing at the Apollo for the balance of the week is composed of a lady and two men who have been featured during the season just closing with the big Webber and Fields show. Those who have seen a Webber and Fields show in the city know what it means to be featured by them. The young lady as prima donna won high praise everywhere. Their voices are of a higher class than is usually heard here. William and Culver present some breezy, original comedy that brings many a laugh. Marie Elmore is a petite little singer singing popular airs.

PUSHING OVERSEAS TRADE.

The United States never has held the commanding position in the matter of its commercial relations with the other nations in the world to which it is rightly entitled by reason of its wonderful resources and the enterprise of its citizens. Of the country's total foreign trade of approximately four and a half billions of dollars, two and a half billions represent exports. As large as this figure is it should be many hundreds of millions larger. Compared with the figures of ten years ago the growth in this respect has by no means been as rapid as warranted, but now that a real, serious, concerted effort is to be made to push our overseas trade it is probable that next few years will have a different story to tell.

Judging by the calibre of the men appointed to the foreign trade council, an outgrowth of the national foreign trade convention held in Washington recently, the movement to expand our prosperity by expanding our international commerce could not be in better hands. Practically every field of industry, commerce, transportation, and finance is represented, and by whose enterprise and aggressiveness have won their leading positions in their special line of endeavor. Under such generalship the movement cannot fail to be productive of both early and important results. Some of the chief ends in view of the council are the creation of a merchant marine, the establishment of American banks abroad, and more systematic governmental co-operation in foreign commerce.

The time for starting such a campaign the council has undertaken is particularly opportune. Opening of the Panama canal to commerce naturally of itself will give an impetus to our foreign trade which will be greatly furthered by the concerted effort of the business interests. The importance of our foreign trade as affecting American industrial enterprise and labor at home cannot be underestimated, as James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation and chairman of the council, says. In fact, the whole country benefits from stable maintenance of the nation's credit in international commerce.

PHILIPP ACTIVE.

It appears that candidate Philipp, nominated by the conservative republicans at their Madison convention, is putting facts before the voters in a most convincing way and consequently causing much alarm to the other republican leaders. In his opening address at Waukesha he told his hearers some plain facts that went home. The Evening Wisconsin makes the following favorable comment on his speech:

"In his address at Waukesha last night, Emanuel L. Philipp said: 'I maintain that only successful effort to protect the people against reckless extravagance and burdensome taxation is substantial progress.' He was right. The real progressives in Wisconsin at the present time are the citizens endeavoring to unfasten the grip of mercenaries on the public treasury and lighten the burden of unwise and unjust taxation which presses upon the shoulders of the people."

"Mr. Philipp is a practical business man and he did not content himself with stating an abstract proposition and leaving the subject 'up in the air.' He proceeded to show in detail a number of the abuses by which the cost of state government in Wisconsin has been raised from four million dollars in 1900 to fifteen million dollars at the present time with practically nothing to show for the increased outlay in the shape of benefit to the people."

"His address is worth reading. It is a speech in which the ideas transcend the words. Wisconsin has suffered from listening to the rounded periods of flippant orators. Here is a man making no pretense to oratory, though what he has to say is presented in a style admirable for its clarity and force. He calls attention to errors and abuses that are costing the people of Wisconsin millions of money and menacing their political rights as well as their material prosperity, and he offers them a program of substantial reform."

"The proposition is worth listening to and worth thinking about. Wisconsin has been humbugged long enough. Here comes a candidate for the governorship who is a foe to humbug."

"A very large number of Wisconsin voters have refrained from participation in elections during recent years, on account of disgust with the schemes of politicians. Mr. Philipp's speech reads like that of a man who is not a politician, though interested in politics. It reads like an honest man's attempt to show what is wrong in Wisconsin politics and government and what might be done to eliminate wrong and establish right.

"It will be not at all surprising if the campaign which he began at Waukesha last night and which he proposes to extend to every county in the state, should enlist a continually increasing number of intelligent citizens alert in the interest of real progress in Wisconsin politics."

THE VACANT JUDGESHIP.

Among the places to be filled by President Wilson is that of the vacancy in the supreme court of the United States. Nobody can forecast the president will do in this matter, but it will afford him his first opportunity to make an appointment of a member of this great tribunal. Newspapers in nearly every part of the country are publishing speculations on the subject and mentioning available judicial timber, mostly in their respective vicinities.

A suggestion made in many quarters is that President Wilson will show a fine spirit and make an exceptionally good appointment, if he would name for the place his immediate predecessor in the white house. William Howard Taft was a federal judge before he was enlisted in the service of politics. It has been his ambition to serve on the supreme bench, and he said as much while deprecating the possibility, when he was secretary of war. President Wilson is a democrat and ex-President Taft is a republican; but when Taft was president he appointed three democrats to the supreme bench. The present political complexion of the court and the traditions governing the balance of parties in the tribunal are said to be likely to influence the President against the happiest solution of the problem involved in the making of this appointment.

A noteworthy possibility is that the honor may be proffered to Chief Justice John B. Winslow of the Wisconsin State Supreme Court. Justice Winslow was a Democrat in the days before his elevation to the bench. As a member of the judiciary he has been reserved in the expression of opinions on partisan or factional issues. He has long been a conspicuous figure, and the fact that he comes from Wisconsin that at one time President Taft stood ready to appoint him to the Supreme bench but was prevented by the refusal of Senator La Follette to enter into conference on the subject. The person who tells the story is said to have stood near to President Taft at the time and is quoted as stating that when the latter sent for Senator La Follette he did not say why he wanted to see him.

The court will not resume its sessions till October, so that President Wilson can take time to deliberate if he chooses, though there has been a rumor that he will endeavor to put the matter before Congress in time to have the appointment confirmed at the present session.

BAITING DAHL.

Candidate Dahl is having a pleasant time these days submitting to the continual baiting by the friends of Hutton who seek to have him withdraw from his candidacy for governor against the republican ticket and apply for the job of Lieutenant Governor. Everyone understands that Mr. Dahl is Robert M. La Follette's personal candidate and that Hutton is favored by McGovern and consequently the supporters of these two gentlemen are blind to anything but their own personal wishes in the matter. They would like a coalition if possible, if not an elimination of one of the two aspirants so that the remaining candidate might hope to cope successfully with the other republicans who want the same job. At the idea of asking Senator La Follette's candidate step into second place on the ticket is most amusing. Of course Dahl will not listen to it but it shows the cheek of some people to even suggest it.

LIMA

Lima, July 17.—Ezra Saxe was born in the lower Catskills, New York, on December 18, 1831, and died at his home in the town of Lima on July 15, 1914, being 82 years, 6 months and 22 days of age. He came to Wisconsin with his parents in 1844, and for seventy years Lima has been his home. In 1856 Mr. Saxe was married, taking Miss Caroline Wheeler for his bride. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Saxe. George E. died in 1890, at the age of 32. Harvey W. died in 1881, aged 19; Merton L. is still living. Two sisters and two brothers also survive. Mr. Saxe preceded her husband to the better world seventeen years ago, since which time Mr. Saxe spent most of the time with his son Merton. About ten years ago he had a partial stroke of paralysis, and much of the time he was unable to get about. Early in life Mr. Saxe was converted and became a member of the M. E. church of which he was ever after a member, and from said church his funeral was conducted by Revs. Drew and Wilson on Thursday afternoon, July 17. A trio of ladies from Whitewater sang "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" and "Shall We Gather At the River."

Relatives from away who were present were Mr. and Mrs. John G. Saxe of Loxley, Alabama; Harvey B. Saxe, a grandson, of Elgin, Illinois; Mrs. E. F. Thayer of Whitewater; E. D. Wheeler and son of Beloit; Mrs. Flora Rice of Milton, Mrs. Purl Burgett of Whitewater. Former neighbors and old friends of Mr. Saxe, who were present, were: Mr. and Mrs. H. O. ## TRIES NEW SYSTEM FOR CATCHING DOGS

Chief Champion Orders Policemen to Give Warning to Dog Owners to Buy Tag or Go to Court.

A new system of dog catching will be tried by Chief of Police P. D. Champion, and it bids fair to be more effective than having a poundman. Yesterday afternoon two policemen were detailed by Chief Champion to the residential district with orders to notify owners of dogs that unless the necessary tag is purchased within twenty-four hours warrants charging the parties with violating the city ordinance will be served.

Section eleven of the ordinance which governs the penalty allowed for the violations, is as follows: "Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of sections four to ten inclusive shall forfeit and pay to the city a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars ($50.00) or less than five dollars ($5.00) for each offense, and each day's continuance of any such violation shall constitute a separate offense."

Chief Champion declares that when warrants are not heeded the person will be brought into court to answer the charges.

TAKE TESTIMONY IN CIVIL ACTION CASE

Testimony was offered this morning and afternoon by attorneys in the civil action case of A. D. Metzinger vs. Charles Eau Claire; before Judge Maxfield in the municipal court. Thomas S. Nolan is defending Eau Claire and Louis Avery represents Metzinger.

The action is over a contract to purchase hogs, the property of Eau Claire. It is claimed by Metzinger a price was set for the hogs, a dollar given as consideration to close the deal and then Eau Claire failed to deliver the property.

OFFER TO GIVE BAND CONCERTS IN CITY FOR ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS

This morning M. C. McDowell, secretary of the Janesville Commercial club, received a correspondence from W. L. Radcliffe, manager of the United States Marine band, Washington, D. C., stating that this aggregation of noted musicians were on a tour through the northern states and would be "delighted" to give a concert in Janesville, October 12th, for the sum of $650 for an evening's engagement or one thousand dollars for a day's engagement. The Janesville public will probably be contented with the weekly concerts by the local band.

UNCLE SAM

Railroad Builder in Alaska

The Government To Undertake a Notable Engineering Project in the Great Peninsula - A Worthy Successor of the Panama Canal As a Marvel of Construction - Difficulties of the Task.

UNCLE SAM, railroad builder in Alaska, is going to prove a worthy successor to Uncle Sam, canal builder in Panama. From the burning tropics to the frozen Arctic is a long jump and a sudden transition but the United States government bids fair to make it successfully. It is no pigmy railroad line, either, which Congress has authorized the President to construct in Alaska. Uncle Sam already owns several small railroads, ranging in importance all the way from the 47-mile Panama Railroad at the isthmus to the "construction road" which have been constructed to transport supplies and excavated material at some of the big reclamation projects in the West. But the new Alaska railroad will overshadow all of these, for it will be fully 1,000 miles in length—an extent of steel-tracked highway which drops a hint as to how big Alaska really is. This new rail system upon which the President is authorized to expend any sum that may be necessary up to $25,000,000 has no official name as yet. It is left to the Chief Magistrate to select a name just as it is left to his judgment to select the route or routes to be followed by the new steel-tracked highway which is to mean so much to the future of our most northerly Territory.

Will Aid in the Settlement of Alaska. There is no doubt but that this government-managed standard gauge railroad, opening up a hitherto isolated region, will do what no other influence could accomplish for the speedy settlement of a rich and promising domain. Indeed to bring about the settlement of the public lands as well as to develop the agricultural, mineral and other resources of Alaska is the specific object of the scheme. And when the reader is told that more than one-half of all the unoccupied public domain in the United States is located in Alaska he will begin to appreciate that Uncle Sam is justified in assuming the role of railroad builder as well as promoter in order to find ambitious occupants for this vast territory.

Big Rotary Snow Plows will be an Essential Feature.

Surveying on the Line of the New 1000 Mile Railroad

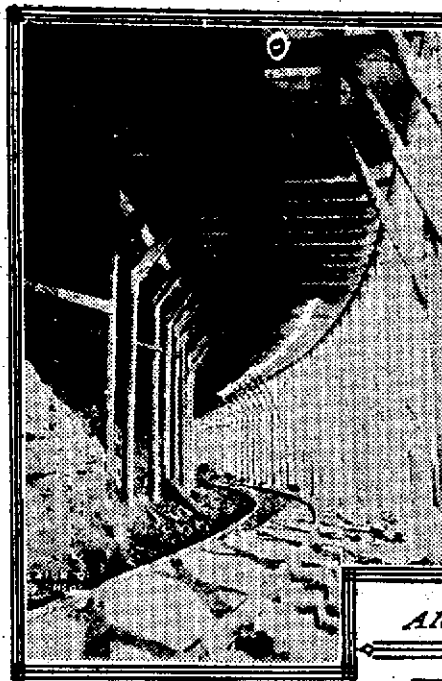

Track-Laying Machine

Much of the Work will be Through Solid Rock.

Of course the plan whereby the government fosters railroad building as a means of opening up "new country" is not an innovation that was originated solely to meet the conditions in Alaska. Much of our own west was opened to settlement in somewhat the same way. Indeed it was as long ago as 1850 that Stephen A. Douglas, U. S. Senator from Illinois, and "father of the system of railroad land grants" introduced in the Senate the first measure which aimed to have Uncle Sam lend a hand in the building of railroads. Ultimately there were constructed under this system, in our Southern and Western States, a total of upward of 17,000 miles of railroad so that it can be appreciated that what is about to happen in Alaska is merely a case of history repeating itself. Unquestionably there is as much incentive to urge Uncle Sam to open Alaska to the Americans of today as there was to render the West accessible to those of a generation ago. Speaking on this subject recently Secretary of the Interior Lane, who is an authority on the monster peninsula of the north, said: "To many of our people Alaska is little more than a land of natural wonders, here and there dotted with mining camps and fishing villages. We should think of Alaska as a land not only of mines and fisheries, but of towns, farms, mills and factories, supporting millions of people of the hardiest and most wholehearted of the race. There is little of hazard as to Alaska's future if the government of the United States owns the railroads which will make its fertile interior valleys accessible from the coast and bring its coal, iron, copper and other mineral resources within reach of the world."

In Alaska from the southern coast into the interior where the great agricultural regions are located is an immense undertaking. It is going to be the work of the pioneer with a great many additional difficulties on account of the extreme cold and the difficulty in establishing a beginning or getting a foothold for settlers. Once the railroad is in, however, subsequent development should come rapidly and easily, because of the rich possibilities in this favored territory. A great advantage to be considered is that this new road or roads will connect the southern coast of Alaska with 500 miles of navigable rivers in the interior and connections will be made with steamboats that will open up this whole river country. In considering the significance of the new railroad it is well to bear in mind that Alaska is equal to one-fifth the whole area of the United States. About one-quarter of Alaska lies north of the Arctic Circle and this portion alone presents the bleak and frozen aspect popularly associated with the whole of Alaska. South of the range of mountains which marks the Arctic barrier there is a territory equal in area to all the States east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio river, which is capable of high development. But the Yukon river, which drains Alaska's great fertile basin, enters the Behring sea at a latitude which prohibits the use of the stream as a connection with ocean-borne commerce excepting during the three summer months. Hence are good harbors in Alaska that are open throughout the year and some of which are only about 1,000 miles distant from the ports on Puget Sound but a number of these harbors are, under present conditions, connected with the interior only by means of trails or wagon roads.

Snow Sheds to Prevent Slides of Snow Blocking Traffic

To sum up the case, transportation has been difficult and expensive because Alaska has today less than 500 miles of railway in nine disconnected systems, less than 1,000 miles of wagon road, 800 miles of winter sled roads, and less than 2,000 miles of trails, with 5,000 miles of important navigable waterways which are closed by ice for about three-quarters of the year. And this in a country comparable in size, resources and climate to Norway and Sweden. No wonder the government experts who have investigated the subject have come to the conclusion that the two great inland valleys of Alaska can never enjoy their full development until they are brought into communication with ocean ports, ice free the year round.

According to the latest estimates Alaska has a permanent population not greatly in excess of 75,000 people of which number something over one-half are whites. Perhaps one-half of the total population is located in Central Alaska, the region which will be benefited so markedly by the new railroad which is to be constructed at government expense. This sparse population in the region to be tapped by the new road is due to the fact that up to the present time the industrial conditions have been such as to attract only the placer miner and even placer mining has been limited entirely to the exploitation of bonanzas. In the absence of means of communication only the arable lands have been taken up so that the farming population is very small, despite the rich opportunities.

Route of the Proposed Railroad. The route to be selected for the new railway becomes now, with the formal sanction of the project, a subject of great interest. First and foremost is the question of just where the new line will "pierce the mountains." The Pacific Mountain system which fringes the coast line of British Columbia and stretches northward into Alaska presents a formidable barrier to inland travel. The great interior valleys lie north of these mountains, and all the ice-free ports lie south of them. Therefore it is through the passes in these mountains that a railway route must be sought. One pass is already traversed by the White Pass and Yukon Railway. Difficulties of Railroad Construction. Whatever be the route selected it is certain that railroad construction in Alaska is going to be fraught with many difficulties and will afford countless opportunities for the display of man's ability to triumph over nature. No matter what pass is selected for the route over the mountains it means that the steel tracks must ascend to an altitude of about 3,000 feet, and there will be tunneling through solid rock. Snow sheds will have to be constructed to prevent the blocking of the lines in winter by slides of snow, and it goes without saying the powerful rotary snow plows such as are in use in the Rockies will have to be provided in abundance on this Alaskan road. On the White Pass Railway, which is at present the principal rail line in Alaska, rotary snow plows are required from November until the last part of April.

The railroad builders will have their own troubles if any portion of the line be projected close to a glacier, inasmuch as tracks in such a locality are always in danger of damage by an advance of the ice. The frozen condition of the ground which prevails in much of the inland region of Alaska will also offer difficulties to the railroad builders. All bridges and trestles will have to be constructed very strongly in order to stand the strains imposed by snow and ice, and also the rush of floods.

While it is, of course, impossible to predict authoritatively at this time, it is the feeling in official circles that the decision of the government will be to build two lines in Alaska, one connecting the valley of the Yukon with tidewater, and the other devoted to the valleys of the Kuskokwim and Sushana. The best available route, it is officially reported, for the first railway system is that which leads from Cordova by way of Chitina to Fairbanks, whereas the best available route for the second road is that which leads from Seward around Cook Inlet to the Iditarod. The first line would be connected with the Behring coal field, and the second line would tap the Sushana coal field. Eventually the two systems will be tied together and branch and local lines will be constructed as the country develops.

Dispatches from Vienna bring the news that Emperor Franz Joseph is growing steadily weaker, and may die at any time. The heir presumptive, Archduke Charles Francis Joseph, who is here seen with his wife and children, is twenty-six years old. He has been in the army since he was eighteen, and has had no experience in government.

MORE WORRY FOR POOR OLD U NCLE SAM: LL LOSE DAVIS TENNIS TROPHY

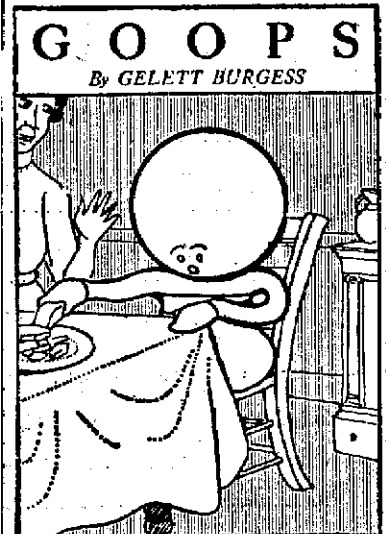

The approach of the Davis cup tournament finds Uncle Sam in a rather uneasy mood. There is every reason to believe that the successful defense of the trophy will be far from a simple matter and American tennis devotees are expressing unforgotten alarm. We have lost several cups of late. It is unpleasant to think that we are about to lose another.

A perusal of the dope shows pretty well that the Australian tennis team will be America's sternest adversary. Brookes, the undefeated of several seasons ago, has shown a remarkable return to his old-time speed and with Wilding it is believed he will defeat with apparent ease all he may meet. Tennis experts agree that Brookes' his proper form cannot be approached.

England has already disposed of France and it is commonly thought that Australia will be able to deal with Canada in much the same fashion. Australia is also the favorite over the British champs. This will make the Australians the challengers and the best of the American talent will have to exert themselves to win. The Australians also have an advantage in being quite used to the most unpleasant of warm and moist weather.

Brookes has twice defeated McLoughlin, but it must be remembered that McLoughlin was but an inexperienced school boy at the time of these matches, while Brookes was at the height of his tennis career. McLoughlin has developed wonderfully since and his chances are of course much brighter. A great deal will depend on the success of the American doubles team. It is reasonably certain that we will be able to land two of the single matches. Three of the five matches are necessary to the retaining of the cup. If the American team is victor in the doubles the cup will be ours for yet another season.

Bottles Airtight. Corks may be made to seal catsup airtight. If they are slightly larger than tops of bottles they should be boiled in clear water for 20 minutes; this decreases their size, says the St. Louis Star. Insert in mouths of bottles while hot; they will expand in cooling, and in this way will make perfectly airtight stoppers.

ECZEMA ITCHED FOR 20 YEARS—RESINOL CURED

Dec. 8, 1913: "I had eczema for 20 years. It started on me when I was but 13 years old and am now 34, and have suffered all these years. It started with small pimples all over my face, arms and hands. My hands would swell up so that I could not shut them, and I was almost blind. It would itch, then burn, and I had to keep the affected parts wrapped up so that I would not scratch them. I couldn't sleep at all—just walked the floor a whole night. "I have tried many different remedies, and spent a large sum of money, but had no relief. Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment were recommended to me. They gave me great relief after the third application, and after using four jars of Resinol Soap, I am completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. H. E. Flagler, Box 13, Dauphin, Pa.

Resinol Ointment and Resinol Soap sold by all druggists for 19 years.

Don't Be Misled if You Have Lung Trouble

If you have Lung Trouble, do not be misled by reports of discoveries of specific remedies to relieve that affection. No specific has as yet been found. Eckman's Alternative, however, is a medicine for throat and lung troubles which has been successfully used in many cases. If you are sick it might be wise for you to investigate its merits and its use may be of lasting benefit to you. Read of this case:

"303 Seventh Ave., New York. (Amateur) Five years ago last August I was taken to St. Francis Hospital and treated for Bronchitis and congested sinuses. After several weeks' treatment I was advised by the doctor to go to a convalescent sanitarium, but could not be admitted because the doctor at the hospital, after a thorough examination, declared my case Lung Trouble, and gave me a certificate to that effect. I showed the certificate to Father Stark, and he advised me to take Eckman's Alternative. I took the Alternative faithfully and free from night sweats and fever, and gradually got better. I have not taken the Alternative now for two years, and can truthfully say I am well. I feel better and am stronger than before my sickness. KOBHMER. (Above abbreviated; more on request.)

Eckman's Alternative has been proven by many years' test to be more effective for severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Asthma, Stomach, Bowels and in upbuilding the system. Contains no narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. Ask for booklet telling of its merits and its use may be of lasting benefit to you. For evidence Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for evidence. ## ALONE IN THE WILDERNESS

By JOSEPH KNOWLES

Copyright, 1913, by Small, Maynard & Co.

"Here's your last cigarette," cried some one, offering me the smoke as I began to take off my clothes. I took it and lit it and then went on undressing. Presently I stood naked. I took two or three final puffs of the cigarette, tossed it to the ground and began to shake hands with every one. My body was already glistening with the rain, but it didn't bother me any. I waved my hand as a last farewell to human companionship for two months and started up the trail. At the top of the incline, where, in another moment, I would be out of sight among the trees, I paused and waved once more to the waiting crowd below. Then I struck out straight along the trail.

I had left civilization! I don't remember a great deal of that five mile trip. My mind was filled with all kinds of thoughts. I kept saying to myself, "I shall keep on going straight ahead into the woods, where I shall not see any one or talk with any one for two months." Then the realization would come over me that what food and comfort I obtained would have to come through my own resourcefulness.

By now I had reached the ridge of Bear mountain and swung along down the other side, where I easily recognized the lay of the land, though I had not seen it for ten years. Presently I saw the surface of Spencer lake through the trees below me.

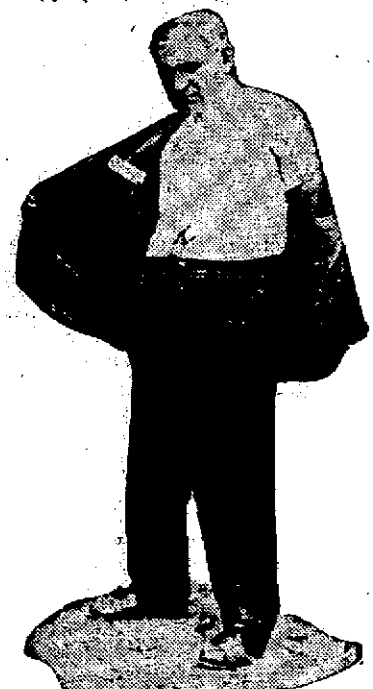

In order to avoid the Twin Camps I swung off the trail to the right, crossing over deadfalls and plunging through the tangled underbrush.

When I reached Spencer lake I looked across that sheet of water, with its background of endless trees that rose up, up, up, and then to the sky line, way beyond, and saw a rugged picture. The sweep of rain hung like a filmy curtain between me and the distant mountain forest, softening the lights and shadows of everything.

For fully fifteen minutes I stood there in the rain and studied that wild stretch of nature. Three ducks flew around in a circle over the water.

I wasn't cold even then. Unconsciously I began to walk slowly along the Spencer shore, wondering just what I should do first.

To save my life I couldn't seem to make any connected plans. So I wandered aimlessly along for some time.

Knowles Preparing for the Forest. Finally reaching a point some distance below the Kempshall camp.

Then I faced the heavy growth of woods and plunged in. I had no particular destination. I was just going anywhere.

Perhaps I had gone two miles when I found myself in a spruce thicket. By now the afternoon was well along.

and I hadn't done a thing but wander about.

I had thought about building a fire, but saw there was little chance with everything dripping wet about me. However, I decided to make a try. First I hunted for a good piece of pine root to be used as a base, then a stick for a spindle. Next I ripped off a piece of bark of the cedar. I tore the inner bark into small strips, which I braided into a kind of rope. This I looped about the spindle, tying the ends to a bow stick I had snapped off a dead tree.

I had to get my fire through friction, caused by whirling the spindle on the pine base by sawing back and forth with my crude fire bow.

In vain I hunted in every crevice and log for dry punk. Everything was soaked through. I then saw the absolute foolishness of it all and straightway gave up the task.

It was now dark, and here I was in this spruce thicket without food or fire, naked and miles from a camp. I made up my mind that I would stay out one night anyway, even if I went back and called the stunt off early in the morning.

I found a place where I could walk back and forth a bit to keep warm, so I started in. With the darkness the air grew colder. The rain continued unabated. I ran back and forth until I was tired and breathing heavily; then I would stop for a moment to rest, sitting down on the wet ground with my back against a tree. Of course I couldn't sit there very long without catching cold, so after a little I would get up and begin walking again.

I must have run miles that night in that little space in the spruce thicket. I would stop to rest, only to start walking again. It must have been early the next morning, about 3 o'clock, I guess, when it began to get very cold. The rain had stopped. I increased my pace back and forth. Thus running and resting I spent the first night alone in the wilderness.

Daylight came very slowly, but with it I was on the move.

Not a thought had I given to food since I entered the forest. I wasn't hungry.

I struck a natural game trail and followed it along, not knowing where I was going.

Presently it began to rain again, and while I got used to it later, I did not welcome it just then. My thoughts were the same jumbled thoughts of the day before.

As I roamed along my resolve to leave the forest and call the experiment off did not figure particularly in the morning's mood. I somehow didn't care where I was going, and I did not feel the cold to any great degree.

At last I reached Lost pond. I had never seen it before, although years ago I had been well acquainted with the country thereabouts and knew this must be it. It looked very small to me and for a moment I wondered if it really were Lost pond.

It helped break the monotony of that dark, rainy day.

I never knew what I went to that pond for, but I think there is something that draws a man or an animal to a place of relief in the woods—any opening, any sheet of water or spring or anything that is different from the miles and miles of trees which become so tiresome.

CHAPTER II.

First Days in the Wilderness. THE rain seemed to be increasing. I saw a deer on the opposite shore, and I thought how comfortable she looked. Then I thought how easy it would be to make plans to catch that deer, or any other deer that came down to the water. I envied her hide that morning. I can tell you!

Then there came into my mind my promise to live within the game laws of the state of Maine. It made me sore to remember how the fish and game commission had refused me a permit to kill the game. I actually needed. They had a perfect right to grant that permit, according to law, but they didn't see fit to.

I grew reverent at this thought because under the circumstances my lot would be ever so much harder than that of the primitive man of old. The first men of the forest were not handicapped by laws from an outside civilized world. If the game authorities had given me that permit, my life would have been more comfortable during those first few days in the wilderness. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

A LODGING FOR THE NIGHT

By Robert Louis Stevenson

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON

Twenty-four famous authors were asked recently to name the best short story in the English language. The choice of Booth Tarkington, Jack London, Alfred Henry Lewis and Richard Harding Davis was "A Lodging for the Night," by Robert Louis Stevenson.

BOOTH TARKINGTON

The lord of Brisetout walked to and fro with his hands behind his back. Somehow he yearned to convert the young man to a better way of thinking and could not make up his mind to drive him forth again into the street.

"There is something more than I can understand in this," he said at length. "Your mouth is full of subtleties, and the devil has led you very far astray, but the devil is only a very weak spirit before God's truth, and all his subtleties vanish at a word of true honor, like darkness at morning. Listen to me once more. I learned long ago that a gentleman should live chivalrously and lovingly to God and the king and his lady, and though I have seen many strange things done, I have still striven to command my ways upon that rule. It is not only written in all noble histories, but in every man's heart, if he will take care to read. You speak of food and wine, and I know very well that hunger is a difficult trial to endure, but you do not speak of other wants. You have totally forgotten the great and only real ones, like a man who should be doctoring toothache on the judgment day, for such things as honor and love and faith are not only nobler than food and drink, but indeed I think we desire them more and suffer more sharply for their absence. I speak to you as I think you will most easily understand me. Are you not, while careful to fill your belly, disregarding another appetite in your heart, which spoils the pleasure of your life and keeps you continually wretched?"

Villon was sensibly nettled under all this sermonizing. "You think I have no sense of honor!" he cried. "I'm poor enough, God knows! It's hard to see rich people with their gloves and you blowing in your hands. An empty belly is a bitter thing, although you speak so lightly of it. If you had had as many as I, perhaps you would change your tune. Anyway, I'm a thief—make the most of that—but I'm not a devil from hell, God strike me dead! I would have you to know I've an honor of my own as good as yours, though I don't prate about it all day long as if it was a God's miracle to have any. It seems quite natural to me. I keep it in its box till it's wanted. Why, now, look you here, how long have I been in this room with you? Did you not tell me you were alone in the house? Look at your gold plate! You're strong, if you like, but you're old and unarmed, and I have my knife. What did I want but a jerk of the elbow and here would have been you with the cold steel in your bowels, and there would have been me, linking in the streets, with an awful of golden cups? Did you suppose I hadn't wit enough to see that? And I scorned the action. There are four d—d goblets as safe as a church; there are you, with your heart tickling as good as new, and here am I, ready to go out again as poor as I came in, with my one white that you threw in my teeth! And you think I have no sense of honor—God strike me dead!"

The old man stretched out his right arm. "I will tell you what you are."

he said: "You are a rogue, my man, an impudent and black hearted rogue and vagabond. I have passed an hour with you. Oh, believe me, I feel myself disgraced! And you have eaten and drunk at my table. But now I am sick at your presence. The day has come and the night bird should be off to his roost. Will you go before or after?"

"Which you please," returned the poet rising. "I believe you to be strictly honorable." He thoughtfully emptied his cup. "I wish I could add you were intelligent," he went on, knocking on his head with his knuckles. "Age, age; the brains stiff and rheumatic!"

"God pity you!" said the lord of Brisetout at the door.

"Goodby, papa!" returned Villon, with a yawn. "Many thanks for the cold mutton."

The door closed behind him. The dawn was breaking over the white roofs. A chill, uncomfortable morning ushered in the day. Villon stood and heartily stretched himself in the middle of the road.

"A very dull old gentleman," he thought. "I wonder what his goblets may be worth?"

A long wisp of artificial grain that served as a stick-up on the sweet girl's hat was placed horizontally so that it tickled up and down the face of the man who sat next to her in the street car, until it came to a resting place with the end nestled in his right ear.

After the car had traveled a few blocks the man was seen to remove from his pocket a large jackknife, which he proceeded to strop on the palm of a horny hand.

Excitedly the girl inquired: "Why are you doing that?" "If them oats gets in my ear agin," the man ejaculated, "there's gonna be a harvest."

Howard Elliott, president of the New Haven railroad, said at a dinner in New York:

"I don't encourage back talk among our employees—but I must say my sympathies are rather with one of our conductors who ventured, under great provocation, on a little back talk the other day. "As the conductor was punching tickets a man said to him, with a nasty sneer: "You have a lot of wrecks on this road, don't you?" "Oh, no," said the conductor. "You're the first I've seen for some time."

VITAL FORCE

Disease germs are on every hand. They are in the very air we breathe. A system "run down" is a prey for them. One must have vital force to withstand them: Vital force depends on digestion—on whether or not food nourishes—on the quality of blood coursing through the body.

DR. PIERCE'S Golden Medical Discovery

Strengthens the weak stomach. Gives good digestion. Eliminates the sluggish liver. Feeds the starved nerves. Again full health and strength return. A general upbuilding enables the heart to pump like an engine, running in oil. The vital force in one's body is established to full power. Year in and year out for over forty years this great health-restoring remedy has been spreading throughout the entire world—because of its ability to make the sick well and the weak strong. ## The Pattern of Service

By REV. L. W. COGNELL
Assistant to the Dean
Mealy Bible Institute, Chicago

TEXT—"And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him. And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue; and looking up to heaven, he sighed, and said with a loud voice, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened. And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain." Mark 7:32-35.

Many suggestions for the healing of souls may be found in this story of the cure of a man who was deaf and dumb.

of Jesus—"up to heaven." The heavenward look is necessary for those who would restore sick souls.

Such a look is assuring. In this day when so many have lost faith in the great facts of the gospel, we do not wonder that we hear so much of social betterment. We need the vision of God's great power if we are to face with courage the deep problems of sin in human life, rather than be content with physical helpfulness.

The upward look is empowering. If we are too busy to pray we may expect our strength soon to depart from us. But when we read of David Brainerd lying on the frozen ground, wrapped in a bear's skin, spitting blood as he lay, but continuing from sunrise to sunset in crying to God—we do not wonder at the great blessing which came upon the Indians to whom he preached.

Such a look is balancing. We need to pray after great undertakings as well as before them. When a woman told Bunyan his sermon was excellent, he replied, "Yes, I know it; the devil told me so before I left the pulpit." God sometimes gives us thorns in the flesh lest we be exalted above measure.

The Means

used in the cure are interesting. The man was taken aside; perhaps he would not be impressed with the working of God, in the crowd. Stanley became a Christian through his contact with Livingstone and felt that God had led him to Africa, away from the world, so that he might have time to think. This is the secret of many a sick-bed or sorrow.

Christ adapted the means to the need. By putting his fingers in the man's ears and putting upon his tongue the spittle, which was often used medicinally, he let this deaf man know his purpose to heal him. What a comfort that many of us who are not equipped to deal with the cultured have peculiar adaptation to deal with others, and that the Great Physician uses means adapted to the end.

Christ did not shrink from contact with the sufferer. We cannot pay someone to do religious work for us simply because it is unpleasant. Samuel Hadley would put his arms of love about the wrecks of humanity that came to Water Street mission, even though he would have to change his clothing when he went home.

The Sign

of Christ should not be forgotten: "Looking up to heaven he sighed." He saw in the man only an example of the world's suffering and sin and he sighed over it all.

Men have remedied physical ills when they have felt them. John Howard reformed the prisons of Europe after he himself had had an experience of prison life. If we do not sigh over spiritual needs we are not likely to supply them. We must bleed if we would save. The awfulness of being without God, without Christ, and having no hope, must weigh upon us if we are to be zealous in snatching men from the burning. No culture or refinement should blind us from the fact that "he that believeth not is condemned already."

The Cure

It made the man companionable; he could converse with his friends now. The salvation of the soul puts one into fellowship with God and with his people.

It made him useful. He no longer needed to be dependent upon any man. Spiritual cure makes us "workers together with God" and many testify that they date their true life from their second birth through faith in Christ. Jerry McAuley was a river thief whose heart God touched while he was imprisoned in Sing Sing. He became a great blessing to many and at his funeral the streets were filled by men of high and low degree who came to honor him.

Of course, it made the man happy. His tongue doubtless sang aloud in rejoicing; his ears were ravished with the sweet sounds of nature. Wherever the gospel goes, music is born and the wilderness and solitary places of human life are made glad.

The great physician now is near. The sympathizing Jesus; He speaks the drooping heart to cheer. Oh, hear the voice of Jesus!

Daily Thought

Think of thy brother no ill, but throw a veil over his failings.—Longfellow.

ADVOCATES COMPLETE RECORD OF DISEASES

L. W. Hutchcroft Points Out Importance of Records at Health Conference.

Madison, Wis., July 17.—The necessity of a complete record of communicable diseases was adduced before the state health conference in session here today by L. W. Hutchcroft, statistician for the state board of health. Under a state law health officers must make a survey of the health conditions of their localities at least once a year. The accurate gathering of statistics of communicable diseases "is primarily the most important duty which the health officer has to perform," declared Mr. Hutchcroft. He declared that a survey of health conditions includes the gathering of vital statistics, and complete data on communicable diseases, sewage disposal, water supplies, garbage disposal, nuisances, sanitation of public buildings, dairy and milk inspection and an inspection of bakeries and slaughter houses.

"The milk supply of a community is of first importance," said Mr. Hutchcroft. "Many infants and young children have no other food supply; therefore, it is of vital importance to their welfare that pure, wholesome milk be provided. The health officer should make thorough inspection of every dairy in his district at least once a year and as much oftener as time will permit. The object of this inspection should be to determine the conditions and methods of operation of milk production and distribution. If no other apparatus is available a sediment tester will be sufficient. Just how detailed these inspections should be made has already been explained by other speakers." Mr. Hutchcroft said that a survey of health conditions should include the gathering of statistics on infant mortality. He told his hearers that for the state as a whole the death rates show that there are over 5,000 deaths each year among children under one year of age.

"Nothing permanent can be accomplished in preventing this great loss in human life until we know where the babies are and when they arrive," he said. "It is a problem in every district in the state."
